

With your Thanksgiving Dinner

WILL it be turkey—plump and luscious; the more delicate milk-fed chicken; or a goose fattened for the sacrifice? Will your table groan under a huge roast of beef, a juicy leg of lamb or succulent pork?

It really doesn't matter much. If the spirit is there, a sandwich and a glass of milk might be Thanksgiving dinner enough. The important thing is to get what most of you like most to eat.

As for drinking—there is one beverage which will grace any Thanksgiving dinner, whether it be of sandwiches or turkey. A living, bubbling beverage that will add its share of joy to the occasion—Clicquot Club Ginger Ale.

They all like it!

For Clicquot Club Ginger Ale is a real Thanksgiving drink. Served cold enough to quench the most aggravating thirst—yet it has an inborn warmth that will not chill the body or the mind.

Wouldn't it be better to order a case from your grocer tomorrow, so that there'll be no danger of forgetting, and no regrets?
